ADHD Help Sheet - Not really depression or anything, I just found my ADHD was being completely unmanaged. - Pre-leave I was in a similar state of management as I was when I failed and barely passed a bunch of units in my undergrad - Work is easy but life is hard. The ADHD help sheet is something my ADHD coach recommended I do in 2020 if I ever fall back into old habits. Obviously, I didn't. - Making what have so far been a lot of combing through - I am still struggling with some base-level stuff, and instead of just working regardless of how that is, I want to sort out the base-level stuff and have a good foundation before I start getting into work. - Therefore work is still sporadic while I sort out this stuff. I have plenty of stuff to do on the PhD (I dont need more work) but current a lot of work is just going into making sure I drink water every day and stuff.
Literature Review (Topic 1: Should you visualise uncertainty) - Di agreed I can do PhD work in small bite-sized topics to keep it manageable - I have a lot of notes from the wombat conference and a lot of people don't visualise uncertainty at all and honestly have pretty good reasoning for it - I read a couple of papers on visualising uncertainty during the literature phase but it was a mixed bag which reasoning they considered (time spent looking at plot, severity of decision, knowledge of the audience, amount of information already in the plot, etc). - I want the first topic to be if a plot should visualise uncertainty at all based on the audience and how it is being used and if people do visualise uncertainty - I made a gihub repo for the literature review which I need to add you all to (its on my todo)
